

Annual General Meeting
and
“When Sinning is More Fun!”

Friday 6 May 2011

Dr Bruce Stevens will present a case study of a married woman who arranged sexual encounters through a website. This case raises searching questions for Christian psychologists about our response to blatant ‘sin’. Is it ethically wrong to talk about such a category (there might be a risk of a complaint about judging the patient)? What is the place of theological categories in our discussions? Are such considerations limited to our conceptual formulation? Is there a place for theological thinking in the dominant medical model? This and more because discussion will be encouraged.
